Science Workshop

Science teachers at the Appomattox Intermediate School were recently involved in two days of in-service meetings to plan their instructional programs in science for the 1972-73 school session. The teachers established objectives which would enable the student to develop:

1. A realization and appreciation of, and a commitment to the importance of science and the role of man in his environment;
2. the ability to use those processes that are employed by scientists in solving problems and in communicating process results;
3. an interest in science commensurate with each student's ability;
4. an understanding of the tentative nature of scientific theory and the values and limitations of scientific research;
5. broad concepts that are related to science;
6. knowledge of subject matter sufficient for his successful existence while contributing to the well being of society;

The major portion of the workshop was devoted to developing content, or what is to be taught next year, as well as what laboratory activities, teaching techniques and materials would be used to implement an individualized continuous progress science program. The two-days of intensive planning was termed a highly successful endeavor. Arrangements for the workshop were made by Mr. Earl J. Smith, Jr., Supt. of Schools and Mr. Eugene Peyton, Director of Instruction.

PAMPLIN PIPES GO ON DISPLAY

ness roster, the P.S.P. & Mfg. Co., Inc. was considered to be the largest clay pipe factory in the U.S. They also claimed to be the "world's sole producer of genuine Indian pipes." One of its trademarks was the "Original Powhatan Indian Pipe," exclusive property of the company, Advertisements read:

"The original Powhatan Indian Handmade pipe has the distinction of being the exact reproduction of the red pipe made and smoked by the red men in pre-colonial days."

"The Powhatan – a famous smoking pipe, appreciated, enjoyed and valued by connoisseurs, smokers, and antiquarians alike."

Shipped throughout the country –"complete with two long reed steams, historic booklet, directions for use and care, all packed in a rustic container."

From the local hand-made pipe industry came the foot-powered, machine-made Pamplin pipe by the company. Although the company was still buying and marketing hand-made pipes as a sideline, The machine pipes had decorated bowls and shanks while the hand - made pipes were extremely plain, allowing only for different shaped planes to occur on the shank. Over 30 shapes and sizes were eventually produced by the company. The factory packed the pipes in barrels for shipment to parts of the U. S. and the world. Barrels were packed alternately in layers of pine needles (pine-straw or pine -tags) and pipes to avoid breakage in shipment. The hand-made pipes were produced locally until the late 1940's.

These pipes which led to establishing the company outlived the factory. The P.S.P & Mfg. Co., Inc. ceased to exist in the early 1940's because WWII stopped planned shipments overseas and markets weakened. The excess pipes or seconds were discarded and were found a short distance from the factory in Pamplin buried in the ground. By accident in 1965, a large quantity of the factory pipes were unearthed. Since that time several thousands have been sold to the Eastern National Park & Monument Association through the National Park Service and to local citizens and other interested persons.

The most interesting aspect is not necessarily the factory or its production of these clay pipes, but the hand-made methods and equipment used locally. A few people kept their equipment and several sample pipes for posterity; therefore, we can better study the method of making clay pipes. Since these pipes were sold in the Village of Appomattox Court House they are of particular interest to the park staff at Appomattox Court House National Historical Park.

There were two catagories of hand-made pipes: the "Dowel" had a cylindrical- shaped bowl and shank. The mouth of the bowl and shank were larger at the extremities, gradually becoming smaller in size as they neared the body of the pipe. The "Original" had a cylindrical-shaped bowl with an octogan-shaped shank. Bowl interior was the same size throughout its depth, with rounded bottom as though it had been shaped with a broom handle. The shank portion was larger at the mouth and gradually became smaller as it neared the bowl. Later, pipes of this type had the name "Original" stamped on the right face of the shank. Earlier pipes are plain and had no stamp on them. Both types received a reed or fig bush stem approximately five inches long. The bowl and shank of the bowl was at about a 60 degree angle. This would allow the stem as it was smoked to be higher than the lip of the pipe bowl.

The mold used to produce hand-made pipes at home was of a two piece construction. A piece of oak was cut in half, then hollowed out to the desired shape and filled with hot lead. After cooling it was drilled and reamed out to the desired exterior form and size of the pipe to be molded. The pattern in the lead insert could be used indefinitely. Wooden pegs placed into each half of the mold held it in position during formation of the pipe. The oak halves were fastened closed by hinges which held the halves solidly together so as to avoid separation or shifting during the process.

The bowl-reamer , a wooden tool used to form the interior of the bowl, was of one piece construction. The working end was of the length, size, and shape of the bowl to be formed by it depending on the style of the pipe. The shank-reamer was similar but smaller in size depending on the style and size of the pipe. These tools had notches on the underside of the handle to allow the clay to ooze out while pushing it into the mold as the tool and mold shaped the clay. The tools for reaming were commonly called 'sticks.' The hooked-scraper tool was a flattened metal rod with a shallow hook on one end and fitted into a wooden handle. This tool was used to shape and smooth the pipe after being removed from the mold.

The process of manufacturing pipes at home was quite simple and even the children were allowed to help. Red clay was dug from veins or exceptionally fine deposits of clay not containing large grit. The clay was mixed with water to bring the mixture, a smooth dough, to the right consistency. It was then rolled into the shape of rope and cut into specific lengths. The cylinder of clay was placed in the closed mold. The bowl-reamer took inserted and rotated as it was forced down into the mold, therefore shaping the bowl and pushing excess into the shank cavity. With the bowl-reamer in place, the shank-reamer was inserted and rotated completing the configuration of the pipe. The shank-reamer was removed and the mold opened. The pipe was removed from the mold by the bowl-reamer which was still in position. The pipe was smoothed by the hooked- scraper.

After being placed on a board to dry in the sun or in an oven the reamer was freed and removed. A small piece of wire was pushed through the shank cavity and into the bottom of the bowl to provide for drawing of smoke. After drying the pipes they were placed in cast-iron pots which were covered and

Board Signs Resolution Naming Jamerson Contractor For School

May 15 Is Starting Date

A resolution was drawn up and signed Friday by the Appomattox County School Board naming J. E. Jamerson and Sons as contractor for the new County High School.

Prior to this action, the board declared Jamerson the low bidder. The resolution and subsequent contracts call for a construction period of 780 days, May 15, 1972 to July, 1974.

According to the board's attorney, Harry G. Lawson a similar resolution will be drawn up for the purchase of equipment for the new building.

Witnessing the signing of the resolutions by board chairman, Dr. R. H. Gray were the other board members, Dr. A. A. Fratrick, Mrs. Martin Webb, Mr. Lyle Garrett and the superintendent, Earl J. Smith and the director of instruction Eugene W. Peyton.

Architect is Garland Gay and Associates, of Lynchburg. The board chairman, Dr. Gray spoke highly of Gay's work saying that he hopes the building will turn out to be as "agreeable" as the association by the board with the architect and his firm.

In other action, the board approved the purchase of three school buses to be furnished by Lawson Ford, Appomattox low bidder.

Teacher aides for the summer pre-school program were approved, and othe r teacher appointments for the next school year given approval.

Several school classes and school organization trips were also approved.

Gray Signs Resolution

Dr. R. H. Gray affixes his signature to the regulation naming J. E. Jamerson as contractor for the new Appomattox County High School and the setting of a starting date of May 15, 1972. The new school should be ready for occupancy for the 1974-75 school year, according to the superintendent, Earl J.Smith, (not shown). Witnessing the signing are the other school board members, Mrs. Martin Webb, Lyle Garrett and Dr. A. A. Fratrick.

Weatherly, Jr. Makes Alabama Varsity

Clem Goyska, assistant to Coach Paul "Bear" Bryant, at the University of Alabama, has announced Dr. Mark Weatherly Jr. that Mark Weatherly, Jr, had earned a berth on the varsity football squad of Alabama's Crimson Tide for next fall.

Mark, who is better known as "Byrd" to his friends, was a lineman at Appomattox for five years, beginning on the junior football team under Buddy Carson and went on to play for Coach Gordon Bragg on the varsity.

"Byrd" was a volunteer candidate for spring football at Alabama this year and was selected to play on the White team in the Annual A-Day game in Denny Stadium. "Byrd" got to play offensive right tackle in the fourth quarter and according to the coaches reports, he did yoemanlike work in giving a good account of himself. The white

Legislators Speak On Current Issues

Appomattox County Jaycees were the hosts Wednesday evening, May 3 for "Meet Your Virginia Legislators Night" and the appearance in Appomattox of the Honorable Howard P. Anderson, state senator representing this county and the Honorable Claude Anderson, who represents Appomattox County in the Virginia House of Delegates.

Robert Stewart introduced Representative Anderson who reported that of 1500 bills set forth the last session of the House, 863 bills were finally passed.

He spoke of his deep interest in the bill on drug abuse. "I am convinced," he said that "one of the greatest problems in the state is drugs." He says that the nation is in "bad condition" because elected officials and citizens have lost respect for family life and religious use and convictions.

Witness M. Abbitt, Jr. introduced Senator Howard Anderson.

Senator Anderson said that the Virginia Senate is "more liberal" and the House of Representatives "more conservative." He said that insofar as Virginia politics and actions of the general assembly, Virginia is "beginning to look a lot like Washington."

Senator Anderson made numerous comments on the actions of the Assembly. He said that committee assignments were a compromise; that so-called "open housing" in Virginia is a "mistake" and that establishing the Housing Fund was a mistake, also.

He considers one bill in particular a good one, the bill to make loans possible for freshmen students attending private colleges.

Plea Made For More Memberships

Chamber Of Commerce Needs $

The biggest project of the Appomattox County Chamber of Commerce needs assistance from business places and individuals, according to the membership committee and the officers of the C of C.

Additional memberships and paid - up memberships from former members are needed to support the publication and distribution of the county's brochure.

Supplies of the brochure are running low, says the secretary Mrs. June Chenault, who answers the Chamber of Commerce's mail. A little more than a year ago, 100,000 of the brochures were printed and requests have all but depleted the supply, Mrs. Chenault says.

The only source of income for the Chamber of Commerce is the annual membership drive, with $5.00 memberships from individuals and $10.00 from business firms. J. Franklin Vaughan, head of the membership committee asks that all interested persons support the Chamber of Commerce which sends information about Appomattox to all parts of the U.S. and assists tourists and others interested in coming to Appomattox to live and to set up business enterprises. Capt. W. W. Blythe is president.

If You've Been Missed, ACS Is Missing You!

If you or your household have been missed in the annual Cancer Crusade, please keep that Fair Share Goal of $2600 in mind. Do send in a check to Cancer Drive, Mrs. Mary Alma Hudson, Fidelity National Bank, Appomattox.

Each dollar will help raise the goal.

The county so far has given $1,460.43, says Mrs. Hudson, Appomattox Unit treasurer, leaving $1,000 still to go.

Each year the American Cancer Society sets aside the Memorial Day period to seek memorial gifts in the name of departed loved ones. Each of these memorials is added to the Fair Share Goal total. Capt. W. W. Blythe (ret.) is this year's Cancer Crusade chairman.
